

Velda Desadier, M.Ed.
Certified Educational Diagnostician

I moved to the Houston area from Canada when I was ten years old. Following my graduation from Texas Tech University, my brand new husband and I moved to Tempe, Arizona where we lived for 20 years. During that time our family grew to include four children, three sons and one daughter. Also during that time I completed my Masters Degree in Special Education. This was in response to the strong heart I have for kids with unique learning issues. In addition I received training from the National Institute for Learning Development to equip me with additional tools for helping students gain the cognitive skills required to become independent learners. During our time in Arizona I also taught, coached, tested, and provided educational therapy for struggling students.

In 2005, after 20 years in the desert, my family had the opportunity to return to our homeland. I began working with middle-school resource math students, which I enjoyed immensely. My partner and dear friend, Catherine Davis, and I also began working with students in the Montgomery County area to provide educational therapy for students struggling with various learning disabilities. I have been able to use my diagnostic abilities to help target the specific areas that present vulnerabilities for the students. This has been the culmination of a vision Catherine and I have shared and worked towards for several years!

My interests are many. I love sports, reading, learning, and music. I also love to watch my kids (ages 10-18) pursue their passions.
